AZUSA -- The City Council's first hearing for a new mining proposal has been postponed, officials said Tuesday.

Vulcan Materials Co.'s mining proposal for the Azusa Rock Quarry was originally planned to go before the council April 5, but a lengthy Planning Commission process made a notice to a state mining agency no longer accurate, said City Manager Fran Delach.

To comply with the California Public Resources Code, a new notice was issued and the date for the proposal's first appearance at the council was slated for April 19.

That meeting would be the first hearing at the council level for the proposal, and theoretically a decision could be made that night. But if the council wishes to hear more testimony on the subject, another hearing could be scheduled before a decision is made, Delach said.
